

COMPRESSION STOCKINGS

Compression Stockings are specially made, snug-fitting, stretchy socks that gently squeeze your leg. The materials are Nylon and Spandex blends. The common styles have Graduated compression stockings and Anti-embolism stockings. Graduated compression stockings are all tightest around the ankle, getting looser the higher up the leg they go. Anti-embolism stockings are more specific in purpose and designed to help maintain circulation, thus preventing blood clots, for bed-bound patients, particularly those confined to bed after surgery. Compression stockings generally come in two lengths — knee-high and thigh-high. Compression stockings can keep your legs from getting tired and achy. They can also ease swelling in your feet and ankles as well as help prevent and treat spider and varicose veins. They may even stop you from feeling light-headed or dizzy when you stand up.

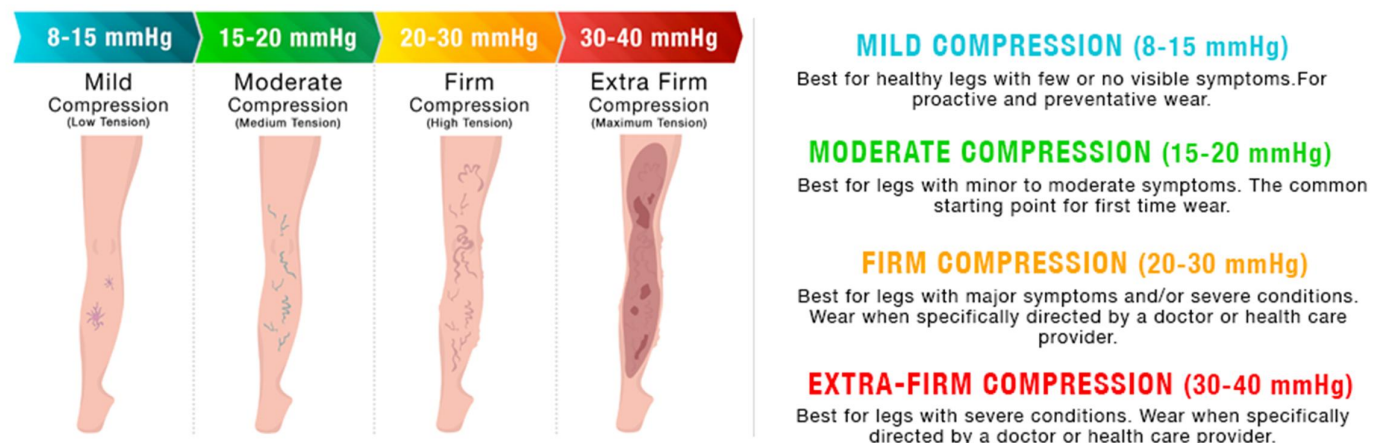

Standard compression levels for compression stockings :

8–15 mmHg Mild pressure, used for proactive leg health — Compression strength for preventative care.

15–20 mmHg Moderate pressure, common starting point for first time wear — Compression strength for minor conditions.

20–30 mmHg Firm pressure, typically used when recommended by a certified fitter or healthcare provider — Compression strength for pronounced medical symptoms.

30–40 mmHg Extra-Firm pressure, used only when prescribed by a doctor — Compression strength for severe medical conditions.
